PHILOSOPHY FROM FLO

FLORENCE STILLMAN, R.N., M.S.N.
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

On August 7, 1990 the National Council of State Boards of Nursing released the information to all Boards of Nursing that a breach in security had occurred with the 790 NCLEX-RN. The Indiana Board of Nursing reported to the National Council that a single booklet was missing. The fact that it was missing was discovered at the test site on the day of the examination. Evidence caused them to believe the booklet may have been taken prior to administration of the exam.

The Board of Directors of the National Council directed CTB/McMillan/McGraw-Hill, the publishing company responsible for the exams, to perform a statistical analysis to detect whether or not there had been widespread dissemination of exam questions. That statistical analysis was conducted as expeditiously as possible so that exam results would not be delayed.

The anomaly analysis used is based on sound and widely accepted psychometric methodology that is able to detect individuals who have had access to questions prior to the exam. On August 31, 1990 information was released by National Council which said that analysis gave no evidence of any widespread dissemination of information in the missing booklet and therefore 790 exam results would be considered valid and reliable. Test results were released to all Boards of Nursing immediately.

The time frame established by National Council and CTB/McMillan/McGraw Hill Test Service for receiving exam results is six to eight weeks. The results for the July 1990 exam have been received within that time period therefore there has been no perceived delay because of the security break. Had there been one expected there would have been a widespread effort by this office to notify all examinees and others who might be adversely effected. Schools of nursing were notified at the time, but since we have no list of employers and the mailing would be tremendous if we had it would not have been attempted until we were certain there would be a delay in results. If a delay was anticipated then the steps deemed necessary to correct the situation would need to have been established by National Council and this Board before any notification could have taken place.

The results of the statistical analysis completed by the testing service showed that there appeared to be no widespread dissemination of information which could have come from the missing test booklet therefore the exam results are considered valid and all who passed have been licensed. There was therefore no need nor even a possibility of notification of anyone other than in an ordinary manner which is through the news media and via letter to all examinees saying "all is well". A news release was prepared and a letter sent to all examinees in an effort to quell rumors and reduce the amount of anxiety which surrounds a situation of such importance. The rumor that exam results had been delayed because of the breach in security is one which adds to the intensity of the situation and the Board wished to allay resultant fears as much as possible. It's not possible to notify all employers and/or potential employers of candidates for licensure by exam when such situations arise. We have no knowledge of whom to notify and it is not economically nor mechanically feasible to mail to all hospitals, long term care facilities, home health agencies and others who are potential employers of licensees. Such a mailing would need to be accomplished upon a moments notice, situations change sometimes hourly and until the Board of Nursing and National Council of State Boards of Nursing are in receipt of all statistical information from the test service no decisions can be made. The extent and seriousness of the problem can not be determined immediately and in fact, initially there is always a great deal of uncertainty about whether or not a problem exists at all.

In the case of the recent breach of security the anomaly analysis was done so rapidly by the test service and the exam results then released so rapidly to Boards of Nursing that there was no time to produce and mail an extensive notice prior to that which was sent with exam results to all examinees. As soon as was physically possible we notified all examinees and allayed rumors by merely saying exam results are valid and reliable and "all is well".

I will be the first to agree that rumors and misinformation are a concern and should be checked for accuracy of information. Inadequate information and lack of information are certainly of great concern and the source of widespread rumors. When there is a space created by a communication deficit then something is created to fill that void and rumors thrive and abound. I believe it is best to communicate openly and directly to try and reduce the number of rumors. There are, however, at times extenuating circumstances which prohibit immediate and direct communication thus creating a communication deficit, such as situations surrounding the breach in security. When that occurs and rumors abound then others have the responsibility to verify and validate in order that rumors and misinformation will not be passed on as truth and light.

If you have concerns or hear rumors be certain they are founded in truth. The most reliable source of information regarding any responsibilities of the Board of Nursing is this office. Please call 314-751-0681 for any concerns or questions you may have. Perhaps we can help.

MESSAGE FROM MELINDA

MELINDA DOLAN SANDERS, R.N., M.S.N.
DISCIPLINE COORDINATOR

This is the fifth in a series of articles regarding chemically dependent nurses. The previous issues have focused on identification of the chemically dependent nurse, the intervention process, treatment options, and re-entering the work place. This issue will focus on the elements of relapse in the disease of chemical dependency.

Chemical dependency is a life-long chronic disease. A disease that has no cure but can be controlled through a "program" of recovery. This recovery program is made up of three (3) basic tasks. The first task of recovery is for the chemically dependent person to recognize they have a debilitating life-threatening disease associated with the use of alcohol and/or other mood-altering drugs. They must recognize that they have a disease that is impairing their ability to stay chemical-free and to live productively.

Once this recognition is achieved, the second task of recovery is abstinence. Total abstinence is necessary. This means no mood-altering drugs or alcohol in any form or amount.

The third task is to recognize the need for a daily recovery program in order to give support and assistance in staying alcohol and drug free one day at a time.

Recovery from the disease of chemical dependency is a process that requires a life-long commitment. Recent studies suggest that it takes two (2) to three (3) years for the average recovering person to resolve the most serious problems caused by the addiction and eight (8) to ten (10) years to resolve the more longstanding lifestyle problems. Through this lengthy process, an exacerbation, referred to as relapse, may occur.

What is relapse? Relapse is a process that creates the overwhelming need for alcohol and/or drugs. Relapse does not begin at the time the individual returns to alcohol and/or drug use, it begins days, weeks, or months before when the tasks of recovery are not met. This pattern progresses, setting up the individual to make a conscious and deliberate choice to use alcohol and/or other drugs.

Relapse does not occur suddenly and spontaneously without warning. There are many warning signs that precede a relapse. The early warning signs include thinking about alcohol and drug use, developing a compulsion to use alcohol or drugs, placing oneself in situations where others are drinking or using drugs, and stopping attendance at self-help groups or other recovery activities. Recognizing and managing the early warning signs of relapse can stop the relapse process before it has a chance to get started.

Another predictor of relapse is timing. Research suggests that the recovering individual becomes seduced by the central nervous system to return to the drug of choice once during the first thirty (30) days of recovery (usually around day 20) and again at three (3) months, six (6) months, nine

(9) months, twelve (12) months, and during the second year. The recovering individual may experience a decrease in stress tolerance, symptoms of depression, increased anxiety, sleep disorders, memory problems, and impaired judgement.

Recovering individuals are taught to avoid feelings of hunger, anger, loneliness, and tiredness to avoid relapse. This is especially important for the recovering nurse. As mentioned in the previous issue of the Newsletter, the environment in which the recovering nurse works plays a vital role in the nurse's recovery. The recovering nurse should work in an environment that respects his/her needs including things like making sure relief is available to allow the nurse a meal break and not expecting him/her to work extended shifts and overtime to avoid feeling tired. The recovering nurse should work in an area where he/she is accepted and supported thus avoiding feelings of loneliness.

Research conducted in 1988 by the Tennessee Nurse's Association Peer Assistance Program revealed 56% of the participants sited work related stress as their primary factor which contributed to the use of alcohol and/or other drugs. Twenty (20) percent of the participants with a relapse history sited work as the main factor which led to their return to chemical use.

Discovering a recovering nurse has relapsed is often viewed by the nursing administrator/supervisor as failure. Health care providers typically do not deal well with things they can't fix forever, therefore, finding great difficulty in treating chemical dependency and dealing with its exacerbation. Factors to consider when deciding how to handle the nurse's relapse include; the length of the relapse, whether drug diversion occurred, if the nurse volunteered the information, actions taken by the nurse to return to recovery, and length and quality of employment. If the recovering nurse is working under a contract that specifically states the consequences of relapse, these steps need to be followed exactly. Failure to follow the employment contract if relapse occurs enables the nurse to further deviate from the contract requirements.

The final characteristic of relapse is pain. The people that die in relapse often die from suicide rather than from the ingestion of chemicals. Research shows the farther a person is in recovery, the more likely they are to commit suicide. If we find a way to remove the stigma of relapse and support the nurses, hopefully we'll help them not to die.

If you have questions about any of this material, or if you or your group would be interested in a presentation on chemical dependency in nursing, please contact Melinda Dolan Sanders at 314-751-0070.

UPDATE ON THE ADVANCED PRACTICE
TASK FORCE COMMITTEE

The Advanced Practice Task Force Committee met on July 16, 1990 at the Harry S Truman office building in Jefferson City where they revised and updated the following:

Advanced Registered Professional Nursing
Position Statement

The purpose of this statement is to protect the public through the use of specialized nursing practice titles that are standardized among professionals, health care agencies, third party payers and the public. The nurse using an advanced registered nurse practitioner title is recognized for having acquired advanced knowledge and skills in a specialty area of nursing practice.

Advanced nursing practice is distinguished from expanded nursing practice which is achieved through on-the-job training, continued education and concentrated experience in a specialty practice of nursing.

Advanced registered professional nurses using the title or abbreviation of nurse anesthetist, nurse midwife, nurse practitioner, nurse clinician or clinical nurse specialist have met the following standards:

1. Completion of a master's degree in one's specialty area of nursing practice (or)
2. Current certification for advanced nursing practice by a national nursing certifying body. *Attached is a list of national certifying bodies recognized as meeting the requirements for certification as of the date shown on the list. Certification criteria will include requirements for completion of a program of study approved by the national certifying body in the nursing specialty area.

* The list "56 Ways to Get Certified" can be obtained from the March, 1990 issue of the American Journal of Nursing.
